The Thorpe family owned this candle since 2009.

The Thorpe family bought this artefact at the candle factory at Nimbin when they were travelling around Australia. They got to go inside the candle factory and they got to see their candle and other candles being made.

The Thorpe family bought this candle so that they could remember their trip to the Nimbin candle factory. They also bought this artefact because it has an interesting pattern, a strange shape, a wick for burning and also because it is unique and hand-made.

This rare one-of-a-kind artefact now sits on a shelf with many other items that the Thorpe family got on their travels around Australia. The artefact has not been used since the Thorpe family decided that they were going to keep it as a show item in the house.

Some interesting facts about this candle is that it is hand-made, made using age-old methods, made using non-toxic materials, lasts for 15 hours and it is also made in Australia.

NOTE FROM CURATER:
The AIGEE Museum is very proud to have this original piece of mood lighting. This artefact has artistic value, is unique and shows the importance of beauty and romance in everyday households. It held much sentimental value to the original owners.
